after Lenine's famous speech, and tood for the first time how, when Lenine was beckled at a secret meeting of the extreme Communists, he described the abandonment of Communist principles in favor of private trading and the sale of concessions as a "strategic retreat." To one radical who demanded to know how long this "retreat." would last Lenine replied with the skilful enigma, "Until Communism is established."

An informal talk with Mr. Goodrich aboard the George Washington showed he possessed the widest kind of birds-sye view of the Russian situation. He sald that Col. Haskell, the head of the Hoover relief mission in Russia, was feeding the children there and doing fine work. He said there were many cases where Russians were abandoning their children with true Oriental fatalism. He declared that unless more foreign help comes to Russia hundreds of thousands there will die this winter.

Mr. Goodrich told of one case where a father with three children arrived at a steamer landing on the Volga at the moment a vessel was leaving there. When he tried to go aboard the vessel an efficer said he had room aboard for only three more, whereupon the father promptly three more, whereupon the father promptly three more, whereupon the father promptly three will spoungest child overboard. "I may tell you," Mr. de Valera continued, "that we stand to-day, no matter what other people say, exactly where we stood, and for the principles for which we stood four years ago. We have gong as far as we can go, consistent with those principles, for peace; we can not mid will not go any further. If we go further it would be for us to betray those principles which have been fought for by generations of Irishmen for the last six hundred or seven hundred years."

Mr. De Valera spoke with great firmness when he declared that "all the power of the empire cannot break the spirit of one true nation."

"We counted the cost four or five years ago," Mr. De Valera continued. "and you who have had the experience of those years assuredly will not suggest that anybody having charge of the direction of affairs, or who hold the standard you intrusted to them, should for a moment give away our principles.
